This rule replaces the current continuing education rule with the new model regulation adopted this June by the National Council of Architectural Registration Boards. The new model regulation greatly simplifies the regulations. It decouples the requirement from the renewal cycle (two years), and changes it to the calendar year. This will make it much easier for architects, who are licensed in an average of 4.5 states, to comply with the requirements. The rule is also being moved from the Administration chapter to the Registration requirements chapter, a more logical location.
